Interacting with Persons with Mental Impairment HB 93

This sensitive and complex issue of law enforcement dealing with people with mental impairment has become a major concern on a national level.

These encounters can be very challenging to officers and:

- Often take more time than other calls for service
- Require officers to have special training and skills
- Typically involve repeat contacts with the same individuals who have unresolved mental health needs.
- And much more

This class will address many issues surrounding this controversial and difficult encounter.
